Kit Water Tanks Manufactured from Timber!

Timber tanks are ideal for any form of water storage. They have an attractive, natural, eco-friendly appearance, which will enhance any property.

How Do They Work?

A Timber Water Tank consists of a treated Radiata Pine barrel tensioned into a rigid cylinder by galvanised steel bands. Water is retained in this barrel by a Food grade PVC liner fitted inside the tank. A conical timber shingle roof seals the tank from the outside environment.

Why Timber?

The benefits of Timber Water Tanks, when compared with other construction options such as plastic or steel illustrate the inherent advantages of the timber tank design.

- Timber water tanks have a pleasing, natural, aesthetic appearance.
- Erection in limited access areas is no problem, as the individual components for the tank can be hand carried through very narrow spaces.
- All timber components have state of the art protection from termite attack.
- The life expectancy of Timber tanks is in excess of 80 years.
- Earthquake and cyclone resistance proven in practice throughout the Pacific and S-E Asia.
- Timbertanks can be dismantled and re-erection at another location if required.
- The timber used is plantation grown - a renewable resource.
- A handyman in under a day can erect the kit tanks.
- Timbertanks require minimal maintenance.

Kit Timbertanks can be built on any site. No special access is required and no disruption to established gardens or landscaping, beyond the actual base area of the tank, is caused.
